

President Addison Beckner Interracial Integration Speech

Year 2077

(This speech takes place in the future)

Good evening, fellow Americans.

Our society is in a time where we must be reminded of just how far our country has come when it comes to being “united”. We must remind ourselves on just how far the society we live in today has come in integrating multicultural and interracial lifestyles into people's everyday lives.

A long time ago when I was growing up during my early years, when we used to hear about tragedies like hate crimes and racism on the news, we often got confused and worried that we were not improving as a whole, we feared we weren't improving as a community, we feared we weren't growing as one. Everywhere we looked was as if it was painted with hatred, but let me reassure you of just how strong and powerful we as humans have been while united since the birth of this nation.

Just over 150 years ago people of my skin color would be regarded as 1/3rd of the vote and racial integration was non-existent. There once was a time where people of different skin colors could not sit next to each other on the bus, but now look at us and how far we have come. 150 years ago, the United States made the powerful and necessary decision to put an end to segregation and discrimination that has plagued our nation for far too long. Since then we have made tremendous strides towards becoming a more united and equal society. This is time for celebrating our 150th annual Multicultural Of America and the effects of interracial integration, and I as the president of the United States would be honored to be giving this speech today.

The impact of interracial integration on the development of our nation has been immeasurable. From the arts and sciences to politics and business, people of all races have come together to contribute their unique talents and perspectives towards the better of this nation. This has accelerated the speed in which our nation developed with our many innovations, and it is what has helped us become the prosperous nation we are today.

Interracial integration has helped to improve our society by promoting diversity and inclusivity, breaking down racial barriers like the simple rights to an equal education, and the great appreciation for different cultures, and has also helped to create a more cohesive society by bringing people of other races together in various settings such as schools, workplaces, and communities. Additionally interracial integration has played a role in promoting social and economic justice by providing equal opportunities for individuals of all races and helping to address systemic inequalities and racism. I want to say thank you to all of our amazing American citizens for helping us get to this point, because without you all and each contribution you have brought to your communities, we would not be where we are today.

Today, we are almost completely mixed and integrated. Everywhere you look has footprints of our nation's interracial integration. Clearly we have done a great job moving forward since where we began, the first of many African American presidents, President Barack Obama would have been thrilled to see where we are today, and I'm sure he is very proud of our nation.

Thank you, and god bless America

This is my vision. Over the summer of 2022, I went up north to Sacramento Boys State assembly and it was amazing. Boys state teaches about our government system and also about the current state of our nation. During my time there I noticed extreme amounts of Interracial Integration. I as a black man was able to be just as engaged as everyone else and it was a dream come true. It was a dream come true for Martin Luther king, and for me to be able to live it is mind blowing. During my time at boys state I noticed how culturally connected everyone was even tho everyone was from different cultural backgrounds. The experience completely restored my faith in the newer younger generation of America and I'm just extremely glad we have grown.
