Attacked by Ignorance

Discrimination is like war
It shoots even when i'm in the trenches
If the door that divides the supposed inferior and superior was opened
I bet things would be different

Look at the world from my point of view
Who knew?
The daily struggles I face
As I run the race
But seemingly stay in the same place
Such a disgrace
And yet I brace myself for the impact of their response

In their eyes it's better to not know
If "ignorance is bliss" we avoid the amiss
What about those who can't dodge the hits of this truly "wonderful gift"
That makes you better, and me seize to exist

I'm merely an accessory
And this pain will be the death of me
Who knew appearance could cause so much animosity?
Our skin is reason enough to be denied equal opportunity

No jobs, no money
No money, can't provide
Can't provide we don't survive but they don't care

When will that change?
When can I show my face without feeling like a disgrace to the human race?

Teaching our youth the truth is a start to unity
However, until that vision comes to fruition
We continue to live in discommunity

Nevertheless, you guessed
We keep these feelings suppressed
Take a bullet through the chest and leave the battlefield a minority mess
At least they won't see it because their ignorance remains a bliss
